Agency Report

National Summary Statistics
(from all participating agencies)
Birth parent recruitment began with the agency approximately 8 weeks post-placement. A staff member from the agency, typically the birth parent’s social worker or counselor, contacted eligible birth mothers and birth fathers to provide them with information about the study. If the birth parent was interested in learning more about the study, the agency staff member collected their contact information and passed the information to the study recruiter. Typically within a week, the study recruiter contacted the birth parent to provide them details about participating in the Early Growth and Development Study. If the birth parent decided to participate, s/he was sent a set of Informed Consent forms and the scheduling process began for the first in-person interview. Between the fall of 2007 and the summer of 2009, 20 adoption agencies across the United States attempted to contact approximately 1150 birth parents. In total, the Early Growth and Development Study recruited 335 birth mothers and 112 birth fathers into Phase II of the study.

Birth parent participants were asked to complete two in-person interviews with the Early Growth and Development Study. On average, the first interview occurred 3-6 months post-placement and the second interview occurred 16-18 months post-placement. Before the in-person interview, the birth parent was mailed a booklet of questions to complete on his/her own. An interviewer from the Early Growth and Development Study met with the birth parent at a location that was comfortable to the participant. Interviewers often met with birth parents at his/her home, but to ensure confidentiality, some birth parents opted to meet in a library or a local coffee shop. The in-person interviews each lasted approximately 2.5 hours. During this interview, birth parents were asked a series of questions by the interviewer and the information was entered into a computer. Participants also completed computer-assisted questionnaires by themselves. Birth parents were compensated $100 for their time and efforts completing the booklet of questions and the in-person interview.

Birth parents also completed brief telephone interviews at 12, 22, 30, and 42 months post-placement. The phone interviews provided our staff with the opportunity to stay in touch with the birth parents in between and after the in-person interviews.

The data that is presented in the following report was primarily collected from birth parents during the first in-person interview. Some data were also collected at the 12 month post-placement telephone interview. This data set includes responses from 335 birth mothers (presented in red font) and 112 birth fathers (represented in blue font).

  1 — The birth mother did not like being left alone with the adoptive family
  1 — The birth mother wanted one of her children to be placed with the family that adopted her baby
  1 — “I wish they had wrote down on paper to keep up with the yearly visits, like I get to see him once a year”
  1 — “Maybe have been a better facilitator with the lawyer and the social worker.”
  1 — “I wish I had picked a different agency”
  1 — “I would never go with them and I probably would have never given up the baby for adoption, very unsupported”
  1 — “Inform me more about the notification process for the birth father”
  1 — The birth mother did not like the process for selecting an adoptive family
  1 — “I wanted to choose a family sooner, but I understand completely why they didn't allow that.”
Agency Policies, continued

— “Meeting with the lawyer was kind of weird. She made me feel like it wasn't my own decision, which kind of bothered me.”
— “Keep their end of the bargain”
— “Maybe given me more copies of the things I filled out”
— “Something that they should have done differently is to explain the process of the legal issues concerning interstate adoptions. I did not get the opportunity to choose this agency; I had an issue with the agency for that reason.”
— “I wish they had recommended that I went to the first hearing; if I had went there wouldn't have been a second one.”
— It was difficult for the birth parent to work with two different agencies
— “I wish that they had been more upfront about the policy about contacting the birth father. I kind of felt like they tricked me”
— “The paperwork process was not smooth. It took a very long time to get the birth father to sign off his rights because of lack of communication on the agency’s part. And they didn't keep me up to date on what was going on with that”
— The birth father felt the agency pushed the adoptive family on them
— The birth father wished the agency had made more of an effort to get to know him
— Birth father should have been provided with more education about the adoption process and his rights
— Birth parent desired more education about the adoption process
— The birth father desired more information about what to expect the day of the birth
— “Just that the relationship with the agency and the hospital, we had to explain to the nurses that the adoptive family was coming tomorrow, etc. That relationship could be improved and would make it easier.”
— “Gotten a hold of me.”
— “I kind of wish that they had made the birth father feel more a part of it, because they really reminded me a lot that because I am not married, I have no rights in the state of Oregon. I felt like they were trying to discourage me.”
— “A little more information about mental health and health issues.”
— “Maybe keeping the contact between the birth mother and I more separate, handled the birth mother and I more individually, i.e. not having one of us pass a message on to the other one.”
— “Included me more in the decisions”

Other
186 64 Nothing: birth parent was generally satisfied with the agency
— “Yes”
— “Told the truth”
— The agency was far away and the birth mom mostly spoke with the social worker over the phone
— “I wish the adoptive family would have stayed longer.”

Looking back on this experience, do you wish you had been involved with the agency or wish there is something the agency should have done but did not?

“I think the agency should have had more choice besides using the adoption agency. I think the pros and cons should have been laid out. I think the agency was too much of a business. For the means to help out a life. They focused on other agendas.”
“I wish I had been involved more so with the agency then I was. The only thing the agency should have done and taken into consideration were my feelings, my thoughts, and ultimately my decision on how I wanted the adoption to never happen.”
“I wish we had been involved with an agency. Some information would have been better than none”
“Yes, inform me of a life that I had created.”
“I wish I would have been more involved.”
“Offer a little more rights to the father.”

  — “Told me that was a great job”
Adoptive parent recruitment began at one month post-placement. The adoptive family received a study brochure and a letter from their adoption agency explaining the details of the Early Growth and Development Study. If the adoptive family was not interested in learning more about the study, they were asked to return a self-addressed and stamped postcard to the study. If the study did not receive a postcard from the adoptive family after one month, the study attempted to recruit one of the birth parents. After one birth parent had been successfully recruited, a different recruiter from the study contacted the adoptive family. If the adoptive parent was interested in participating, they were sent information about the study and a set of Informed Consent forms. Once the Informed Consent forms were signed by the adoptive parents, they began their participation in the study. Between the fall of 2007 and the summer of 2009, 20 adoption agencies across the United States mailed letters to 1415 eligible adoptive families. 270 of these families returned a postcard, indicating that they were not interested in receiving any further information about the study. In total, we attempted to recruit 356 adoptive families and 200 adoptive families agreed to participate in Phase II.

ADOPTIVE PARENT DATA COLLECTION

Adoptive families were asked to complete three in-person visits with the Early Growth and Development Study. On average, the visits occurred when the child was 9, 16 and 27 months old. Adoptive parents completed a booklet of mailed questions prior to each in-person visit. An interviewer from the Early Growth and Development Study met with the adoptive family in their home at a time that was most convenient for the family and the child. During the 2- to 3-hour visits, the adoptive family completed a variety of activities and tasks. Some of these activities included the child and the interviewer, while the adoptive parents completed computer-assisted questionnaires on their own. Other tasks involved the adoptive mother and child, the adoptive father and the child, or all three members of the family. The adoptive family was compensated $100/visit for their time and efforts completing the booklet of questions and the in-person visit. The child also received a toy at each visit.

Adoptive parents also completed a brief phone interview when the child was 6, 12, 22, 36 and 48 months old. The phone interviews provided our staff with the opportunity to stay in touch with the adoptive family before and in-between the in-person visits.

ADOPTIVE PARENT DATA

The data that is presented in the following report was primarily collected from adoptive parents during the first in-person interview. There are also some data that were collected during the 6 month phone interview. This data set includes responses from 207 adoptive mothers (presented in red font) and 179 adoptive fathers (represented in blue font). We have included the descriptive statistics for all questions related to the adoption process.

4 1 The adoptive parent wanted more updates from the social worker prior to being matched
2 1 The adoptive parent wanted more parenting education
2 1 The adoptive parent wanted more information about the cost/financial issues related to adoption
2 — The adoption agency should have kept the adoptive parents better informed of the legal process of adoption
2 — The adoptive parent wanted more guidance on how to deal with birth parents
1 — An agency newsletter
1 — Workshops available post placement
1 — Handle turnover of staff better, give notice to families sooner
1 — “More guidance during birth, agency was closed for Christmas holiday”
1 — “Maybe an update if anyone has checked your profile. I think they do that service if you call and ask them, but it would be nice if they just sent an email saying that someone looked at your profile.”
1 — “More about trans-racial adoptions”
1 — “More communication”
1 — “The knowledge about applying for social security numbers”
1 — “More awareness of domestic adoptions for single women.”
1 — “I wish the agency could have transitioned us better.”
1 — “I wish they'd talked a little bit more about some of the struggles of open adoption.”
1 — “More updates on the status of their agency and how many families are in the wait pool.”
1 — “I would have loved to have known honest statistics on how many birth mothers were calling each month and how many babies were adopted and mostly how many were 'mis-placements’.”
1 — “Stronger sense that they were assisting in finding a birth parent once they were waiting, didn't feel like they were as active in seeking out potential birth parents and matches”
1 — “I wish that their communication skills were better, that they were maybe a little more responsive to emails and stuff.”
1 — “It would have been nice to have a birth parent come talk with us.”
Information, continued

— “Better advertising of classes offered”
— 1 “Better education on other outside organizations e.g. on lawyers, and other facilitators.”
— 1 More information about the cost/financial issues related to adoption
— 1 “Something where you could meet and greet the agency staff for those of us living outside of the state.”

Support

7 1 More/Better support groups
6 — More support in general was need for the adoptive parents
3 — More support pre-placement
3 — Act as an advocate for adoptive parents dealing with a disruption
2 — More support at the hospital
2 — More support for the birth mother

8 5 The paperwork required for the adoption
7 5 The unknown
8 3 Coming to the decision to adopt
4 5 Creating the adoption profile
4 4 Completing the adoption plan
3 5 Fear that the birth parents would change their minds
5 2 Dealing with the birth mother
3 2 The last minuteness of the adoption
3 — Finalizing the adoption
— 3 The amount of time it took to adopt
2 1 Going through the home study
2 1 Anxiety about adoption, unknowns about the process
1 2 Worrying about the birth mother’s health during the pregnancy
2 — Finding an adoption agency
2 — The stress of the experience at the hospital before the baby was placed
— 2 The adoption process
1 1 Dealing with the adoption agency
1 1 Dealing with the attorney
1 1 Deciding on a level of openness with the birth family
1 1 Waiting to take the baby home from the hospital
1 — Deciding between an open or closed adoption
1 — The placement
The Adoption Process, continued

1. Starting the adoption process
2. Legal threats from the birth father
3. Getting the birth certificate
4. Finding childcare for their other children to enable them to travel to get this child
5. Not having a genetic “link” to the child
6. Child was an emergency placement, so family had little time to prepare
7. The emotional ups and downs
8. Meeting the birth parents for the first time
9. Waiting for background checks to be completed
10. “Frustration with the bad situations with possible birth mothers”
11. Lack of control over the adoption process
12. “Working with our lawyer and the social worker out of state to finalize the adoption.”
13. “Adoption preparation...the classes that we were required to take and the delay caused by having to take such courses.”
14. “Making my way through the different types of adoption, international then domestic, and then waiting to be matched.”
15. “Agreeing to adopt, getting everything done for the process, not knowing when we would have a baby, the bio mom's emotions the first couple of weeks after birth, and not having enough time to myself or with my partner since the birth.”
16. “By far it was getting all of the items in order to actually adopt our baby.”
17. “We were alone away from home in non-ideal living conditions waiting to bring our child home. We had no family or close friends nearby for new parent support or visits. It was this huge adjustment and we were all alone.”
18. Waiting for approval to leave the state to go home with the child
19. Having no knowledge of the birth father
20. Not knowing enough about the birth parents
